Statement by the European Union on Croatia (Brussels, 24 January 2000)

Recent parliamentary elections in Croatia, and the democratic way they were conducted, have opened a new phase in Croatian politics. The EU welcomes this development and looks forward to the presidential elections and to the formation of the new government.

Against this background, the Council has decided to rapidly put into place the Joint EU-Croatia Consultative Task Force, in order to start preparing the ground for future contractual relations, within the framework of the "Stabilisation and Association Process". It has also decided, as a first step towards an intensified political dialogue, to extend an invitation to the Croatian Prime Minister designate to the General Affairs Council of 14 February.

The Council is encouraged by the positive meeting President Prodi had in Zagreb on 14 January with the new leadership as well as with the acting President. The Council welcomes the Commission's intention of upgrading its representation to Zagreb as well as of sending a fact finding mission next month, mandated to assess the needs and establish the priorities with a view to enhancing Community assistance. As soon as conditions allow it, a feasibility study on the Stabilisation and Association Agreement could be envisaged.

With a view to the perspective of Croatian integration in the European structures, the European Union expects the new government to meet the well known conditions necessary for a closer relationship between Croatia and the EU: namely progress on constitutional, electoral, media and judicial reform, full respect of human rights and fundamental freedoms, economic reform, active progress on Croatia's obligations under the Dayton/Paris Agreement (including refugee return and full cooperation with ICTY) and a full commitment to regional cooperation. In this context the EU puts special emphasis on the importance of Croatia's active commitment to the principles and objectives of the Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe.

The EU looks forward to working with the new government in Croatia in order to achieve early progress on these issues and is ready to help it meet the challenges it faces in developing a closer relationship with the EU.

The Council expresses the hope that the recent developments in Croatia will be an example soon to be followed throughout the region and will mark the beginning of a fruitful and constructive cooperation between the EU and Croatia.
