

The CVCE is driven by the conviction that it is vital to understand the past if we want to participate in the building of our future. At the heart of its vision is also a desire to share knowledge on the European integration process with as broad a public as possible. The CVCE's new site showcases the epic journey of European integration, the development of the European Union and the birth and development of the European organisations via collections of documents presented in a contemporary, user-friendly environment.

You can now consult our subject files, research corpora and eye-witness accounts by key players in the European integration process on a new-look site designed to provide a smoother, more enjoyable browsing experience. The site also offers a 'Research & Education' platform for researchers and teachers looking for further information about the CVCE's projects. And of course you can find out all the Centre's latest news and check out recent Tweets announcing forthcoming events, calls for papers and other activities. With this new sophisticated, functional site, the information you need is just a few clicks away on www.cvce.eu.