The book ‘Converging Pathways. Spain and the European Integration Process’, edited by Dr Cristina Blanco Sío-López and Dr Susana Muñoz, has just been published by P.I.E. Peter Lang, with a foreword by Prof. Carlos Closa (IPP, CSIC & EUI–Global Governance Programme) and prefaces by José María Gil-Robles Gil-Delgado and Enrique Barón Crespo, former Presidents of the European Parliament.

This volume aims to offer an innovative and interdisciplinary examination of the evolving relationship between Spain and Europe within the European integration process and to give visibility to the current scholarly debate in the field.

Europe: the fruit of a willing construction that superseded much of its past darkness by gradually transforming numerous walls, prejudices and conflicts into bridges of cooperation and mutually enriching developments. Spain: an amalgam of creative tensions, of groundbreaking realisations, of successively frustrated and regained horizons and of long-fought hopes. This book aims to analyse the vectors and degrees of convergence, the cohesion factors and the changing paradigms of the relationship between Spain and Europe in a context marked by crisis and questioning. The key question in this realm is: Do they still revolve around converging pathways? The answer implies, at once, conscious mirrors and new determinations.

For further information on this publication, please consult the relevant P.I.E. Peter Lang link:

http://www.peterlang.com/index.cfm?
cid=5&event=cmp.ccc.seitenstruktur.detailseiten&seitentyp=produkt&pk=80039&concordeid=574112